Aging human skeletal muscle responds poorly to various physiological perturbations, including resistance exercise, electrical stimulation, and ingestion of amino acids and nutrients. These responses decrease muscle performance and may alter rates of muscle protein synthesis (MPS). The acute effects of various exercise-induced physiological perturbations on MPS have not been examined during aging. The purpose of the present study was to determine the effects of resistance exercise on MPS, and the extent to which these effects are affected by aging. Six elderly men and 8 young men performed the same protocol of resistance exercise, intermittent hypoxia, and amino acid ingestion. Amino acid supplementation increased MPS by 16% (P Last week, we introduced The Bracket Pool The intention is to give you as much flexibility as possible.
